 2. To make a comparative and contrasting study of the select novels with regard to theme, style and technique
 3. To analyze and evaluate the perspectives of the men and women American writers on war
 4. To compare and contrast American war strategy of Vietnam war to that of Iraq war
 5. To explore the influence of post humanism through a thematic analysis of veterans' responses to both wars and changes in the U.S. military culture in Iraq war

11. Whether the objectives were achieved (Give details): Yes.

The main objectives of the project cited above were achieved at the end of the study. To begin with, the study of American novels about Iraq war offered an opportunity to the investigator to interpret and reinterpret all major novels that came out of the Iraq war. It also brought to the notice of the investigator that there has been tremendous change in which the war has been fought. Every war prior to this has been differently fought both in mind and on ground. The use of technology has moulded the genre of war fiction and it requires a great deal of study of new inventions in warfare weapons on the part of the investigator making his/ her job challenging and multidimensional. Secondly, the study naturally compelled the investigator to make comparisons in novels selected with its authors with regard to theme, style and technique of narration. The two female writers than three male writers, for example, in the selected study are more sensible and concerned about familial bond which a woman soldier always stories for. Of the five novelists selected for study two writers namely, Kevin Powers and David Abrams of whom Powers being the Iraq war veteran and Abrams being war journalist bear the ground experience of war and that makes them distinct war writers in their narrative mode. Naturally, their war narrative exhibits war as if it is a running commentary of the ongoing Iraq war. Despite America's claim of its victory in Vietnam and Iraq it has been said time and again that America lost the Vietnam War whereas its victory in Iraq is doubtful.

12. Achievements from the Report:

The research project undertaken entitled Isolation and survival problems of soldiers in select American novels about Iraq war has once again revealed to the world that despite technological inventions in war fare activities and ultra modern techniques in unveiling the secrecy about bio chemical weapons of war, we are unable to bring an end to any war – big or small on planet earth. On the contrary, growing number of wars are only leading to another war in future. Secondly, Iraq war like the Vietnam War seemed to be resulted in total failure except the success of overthrowing the tyrannical regime of Saddam

Hossain. The American army as it were continued to exploit the female soldiers during the war. Nevertheless, all soldiers suffered from war trauma and underwent tremendous mental torture after the war in their home country. The only woman writer in the select American writers Helen Benedict seemed to be more women sensitized and spared nothing to explore and exhibit the dominancy of male soldiers over female. In a way, war provided an opportunity to exploit and torture female soldiers in American army.

14. Contribution to the Society (Give Details) :

The research project undertaken will be fruitful not only to American society but to any society in the world in realizing the isolation and survival problems of soldiers caused by war in American army. On one hand society feels proud of its army when it wins war but many times it uncared or is unaware of the physical and mental torture which the soldiers undergo. The present study will be an eye opening case for the society in understanding and empathizing the plight of soldiers during and after war. The study will also lead the society on the path of peace and harmony between and among countries in the world. In other words, it will reiterate that war was and will never be a solution to resolve world problems and we all should condemn it whenever and wherever it breaks.

Summary of the Findings

(Attch. to Point no. 13)

The novels selected for study under Minor Research Project have resulted in following findings:

1. War novels in general and American novels about Iraq war in particular showcase the intolerable suffering of soldiers caused due to war
2. When compared to previous American war novels, the Iraq war novels are written with more pro citizen perspective in Iraqi and American society.
3. The Iraq war novels show the failure of the U.S. administrative policy as its charge on Saddam Hussain regarding secret storage of Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) in Iraq resulted in nothing but waged war on Iraq and its people.
4. With regard to life of the Iraqis, the war brought no change in their life. That is to say, to them the life before and after Saddam's regime remained the same for the American army also exploited and tortured them.
5. Despite the U.S. claims of its win in Iraq war, it proved time and again that it was far from truth. To put it in comparison to its war on terror that was launched in Afghanistan, its cowardly withdrawal from Afghanistan besides a two decade long stay in Afghani soil is a complete failure as it left the Afghani people deserted a day before the deadline given by the Talibani regime, the Iraq war was a mute failure on the global front.
6. The study once again showed that war is not a solution to any problem in the world and only it is through peace and harmony that world can prosper.
7. The study has also brought to the notice that the postmodern war as is case with the Iraq war has bought impact on soldiers' physical and mental life very badly.
8. The novels also expose America's claim of sensitizing women soldiers and encouraging them to join army as women soldiers in the novels undergo tremendous mental and physical torture.
9. All previous war fought by the American Army, this war also mirrored the patriarchal hegemony in American society where woman is harassed, seduced, and sexually assaulted by men
10. The war novels once again reemphasize the uncompromising value of Peace in all world cultures and societies and the only way to stop war is to follow the path of Peace and harmony.
